TO WATCH IN 2019

Eddie Pepperell

Pepperell finally won for the first time and just missed out on the Ryder Cup. But, with 2 wins and 5 top 10 finishes in 2018 he has become one of the most consistent players on tour.

Matt Wallace

Wallace has proven that he is a winner, after six wins on the Alps Tour in 2016, his maiden European Tour triumph in 2017 and then three more in 2018. Definite major contender for 2019.

WR: 44

Lucas Bjerregaard

The Dane won his second European Tour title in 2018 at the Alfred Dunhill Links Championship and has seen a huge rise in the world rankings, from 239th to 45th as well as qualifying for The Masters.

WR: 45

Tom Lewis

Won on the Challenge Tour in 2018 before winning his second European Tour title at the Portugal Masters just two starts later, rising from 370th in the world at the start of the year up to 78th.

WR: 78

Aaron Rai

The Englishman had a steady enough season, with several good finishes, and comfortably retained his playing privileges. He then took all the pressure off his young shoulders by winning the Hong Kong Open.
